The Akron Story Circle Project: Rethinking Race in Classroom and Community (Paperback)

By Carolyn Behrman

University of Akron Press, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Cultures around the world have long employed storytelling to transmit important values and beliefs and to build community. Further, some research has indicated that individuals retain more from stories than other forms of information transmission like lectures. The pedagogical use of storytelling might have even more relevance in our digital society in which communication is shorter and less personal. Using ideas and practices generated by John O Neal and Theresa Holden through their Color Line Project, several faculty members at the University of Akron began a storytelling project coinciding with Akron's Rethinking Race event. The project brought together an intergenerational and intercultural group of students, community members, and other parties on an equal playing field, allowing participants to operate as co-creators of a community's consciousness. The interactions brought a level of understanding about race that could not have been achieved in isolation. Moreover, the conversations, the stories, resulted in rich new avenues of academic engagement and extended artistic projects. This book is part user's manual and part users stories. Mostly, it is the tale of a journey. Unlike a traditional classroom, in which an instructor...
