Not illustrated. 1870 Excerpt: .although the scales were worn off and the nose and tail sore, and the fish would remain plump, in good condition and the stomach invariably full. Friday, July 22.--Temperature of water 67. At 11 A. M. we examined the shad in the pens, and finding them all diseased turned them loose. Saturday, July 23.--Temperature of water 66. We examined a box of eggs that we sunk in the Sound the 20th, and found those that were taken from the two females, about 1,000, looking the same as all eggs previously taken, when three days old. We took up the pound and pens to-day, turned loose the remaining shad, and closed our experiments. HENRY J. FENTON. It should be recollected that these experiments were conducted by men who were very confident that they would be successful, and every facility was afforded to them to make the test decisive. The result was that not a single young shad was hatched in the salt water, and it would seem to be demonstrated to the satisfaction of every fair-minded person that the eggs of the shad can only be properly developed and made to produce healthy young fish in the fresh water to which the parents annually resort for the sole purpose of spawning. The report of the catch of shad in the Connecticut River and the pounds near its mouth, in Long Island Sound for 1881 is as follows: Pounds. 6 in Saybrook caught.--97,850 10 in Westbrook --129,788 7 in...
