

A New American Century for Africa: Rhetoric or Reality?

By Abdelkrim Dekhakhena

GRIN Publishing Sep 2014, 2014. Taschenbuch. Condition: Neu. Neuware - Seminar paper from the year 2013 in the subject Politics - International Politics - Region: Africa, grade: A, Université 8 Mai 1945 (Université 8 Mai 1945, Guelma), course: American civilization, language: English, abstract: The twenty first century announced more promising for the black continent as the US turned massively and determinedly to Africa. Despite previous attempts by former administrations, it was the Bush administration which showed more interest in an economically and politically distressed area for so long. In the light of the international competition over the continent's resources, the United States possesses clear and compelling national interests in Africa. There are vital security, economic, and humanitarian interests, including reliable long-term access to energy, shared largely by the African people and the international community. Yet, despite the rhetoric, did the Bush Administration really work to bring about a fairer and more just Africa One of the central questions which need to be asked is to what extent did President Bush's policy to help the African nations solidify the overall US policy Or was his project implementation influenced largely by narrow American realpolitik perspectives thus missing the opportunity to lay the foundation...
