As only thought of with regard to it, as a wish, a conception: may the tree blossom! (lvxthUi, optativus). . As ready to befall it, in case something else happen: / eat that I may live, hence do not live in case I do not eat. Thus the two verbs to eat and to live are brought into closer relation (Torotxrtxti, relativus or conjunctivus). 2. The first person, with reference to another, can desire that that other should pass into some state of being imperativas): be happy, be active, c. Obs.--The moods also appear in all different genera of the verb, and enter into the several tenses, but under some limitations in the latter respect, of which we shall speak hereafter. 3. The moods already enumerated express existence always in connection with one of the three persons. If the expression...
