A most unnatural rebellion against king David had just been suppressed by one sharp, decisive battle, and by the ignominious death of the rebel leader. David was an affectionate father as well as a sovereign; and though he had been compelled to take hasty flight from his capital, to save his life, finding no place of safety short of the eastern bank of the Jordan, - the whole kingdom, aside from this, being swept over by the sudden wave of the rebellion, - yet now, when the crisis was past, and the victory had given him security for his life and his throne, his thoughts became absorbed in the tragic fate of his son, - that indulged and favored but ambitious son, who had so wickedly plotted against the throne and the very life of his father, and had just been slain in the midst of his wickedness. Forgetting all other interests, the feelings of the father overcame the man and the sovereign, and he gave himself up to the agony of the moment. The army, which had remained faithful to the king, and had suffered, and fought, and bled, and conquered, leaving not a few of their number dead upon the field, flushed with the great victory, returned, expecting the thanks and congratulations of a grateful sovereign, so narrowly escaped from utter destruction.
