Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1889 Excerpt: . . . a Calendar descriptive of the successive beauties of the year, afterward, in 1821, republished in a collected form, as The Months. In 1819, again, he issued from the press two poems upon classic themes, one of them relating to Hero and Leander, and the other to Bacchus and Ariadne; while, in 1820, lxe reproduced from Tasso, Amyntas, a Tale of the Woods, which he inscribed to Keats. What is of far greater interest to note, however, in his regard, at this period of his literary career, as marking more particularly its laborious development, is the fact that, between the 3rd October 1819 and the 21st March 1821, he brought out, from week to week, in sixty-six numbers, one of the most racy and delectable of all bis periodicals--The Indicator. In it, just as the humour of the moment prompted him to his choice of a theme, he discoursed, always deliriously, upon topics the most varied and wildly incongruous in the wide universe of things--upon Sticks, Hats, Thieves, Shops, Books, Dreams, Coaches. It was in recognition of his exceptional success in this new character that Charles Lamb apostrophized him in the couplet--Wit, poet, prose-man, party-man, translator, Hunt, thy best title yet is Indicator. It is interesting to bear in recollection the fact in regard to these essays that, among many of the more notable men who were contemporaries when, from week to week, they made their first appearance, each had his special favourite. Thus, Shelley...
