In discussing the standard of living in the United States of America, I shall consider the producing classes as the people. They constitute the great majority, embody the vital forces of the nation, and represent its life and distinctive character. Those who eat the bread of idleness are much alike in all countries, doing little in illustrating the genius of institutions, and less if possible in material development. While basing conclusions upon a comprehensive study of national and international statistics and personal observation of life in many countries, I shall not go into statistical details and minutiae of evidence from which these deductions are drawn. CONDITIONS FAVORING A HIGH PLANE OF LIVING. An analysis of the conditions which mould the life of the people representing the civilization of the world leaves no room for doubt that the American standard of living is the highest known....
