Springer. Hardcover. Condition: New. 338 pages. Dimensions: 9.6in. x 6.5in. x 1.0in.The present work is one of the very few to which the new postgraduate can turn for an introduction to theoretical methods in the exciting new area of soft condensed matter, containing descriptions of dynamics and non-equilibrium statistical mechanics. Over the last 15 years connections have been made between polymers, colloids, liquid crystals and self- assemblies, and these have greatly assisted our understanding of a growing amount of experimental data on their dynamic properties: light scattering, rheology, flow-induced phase transitions, X-ray and neutron scattering. Nowhere else have the leading exponents in their fields been brought together to provide a consistent account of the new experimental methods and the outstanding challenges that face the researcher into complex fluids today. Audience: Suitable as a graduate text as well as for the seasoned researcher. Many contributions conclude with research material stimulated by the discussions at the ASI that gave rise to the book.
