This is the true story of the Monrovia Police Department Nationally Recognized Community Activist Policing program from 1989-2017. Who would have ever thought that police officers might be asked to become social activists in their fight against crime? The thought of it conjures up pictures of the hippies and militants of the 60s. With these images in mind, one has a very difficult time picturing a police officer as a social activist. In the early 1990s, the Monrovia Police Department realized that we had to become activists in order to gain the support of the community in stopping crime. We could no longer be viewed as only enforcers; we needed to make the transition to facilitators of community needs as part of a police-citizen partnership, working together to achieve a desirable community. We realized that if we did not establish a compassionate working relationship with the people whom we were sworn to protect, demonstrating that we cared about them, who would? If we did not fight for their right to live in a community that was crime-free and peaceful, who would? In reality, if the police do not work with neighborhoods in a compassionate and activist role on crime and quality-of-life issues, the void will often be filled by self-proclaimed anti-police activists, who are only interested in personal agendas and self-promotion and who will push their own agendas, often at the city's expense. We simply can't be effective without the help of other city departments, the school district, county and state agencies, and the citizens themselves. The people who live in a community know best what its problems are and how they can be solved. For the...
