Sand closely resembling the beach sand is found in narrow strips along the top of the Pictured Rocks, at an elevation of nearly 200 feet above the present level of Lake Superior. The peculiar position of this sand and the presence of gravel would seem to indicate that it is of glacial origin. But few attempts have been made to cultivate the Dunesand, on account of the inability of the sand to retain moisture and plant food. Success could be expected only with such fruit and vegetable crops as thrive on the very lightest sandy soils. The better class of timber has long since been removed, and only small and inferior trees remain. Among the shrubs which make up the undergrowth, the blueberry is the only one of value. A large number of people are employed along the coast during the summer in picking and marketing the berries. Foster and Whitney's Report of 1850. The following mechanical analysis shows the texture of a typical sample of the Dunesand: Mechanical analysis of Dunesand. The soil of the Miami sand, to a depth of 12 inches, is a slightly loamy sand, interspersed with a small amount of gravel. All grades of sand enter into the composition of the soil, but as a whole it may be said to have a medium texture. The proportion of silt and clay ranges from 4 to 10 per cent, and...
