Excerpt from Cooperative Economic Insect Report, Vol. 7: May 31, 1957 The tornado which swept through the suburbs of Kansas City, Mo., on the 20th brought death to 37 and injury to over 200 persons, while on the following day when a series of twisters struck southern and eastern portions of the same state, some 14 additional deaths were reported. Also 4 persons were killed at Lawton, Okla. A few other areas where tornadoes struck during the week were Harris and Staples, Minn.; Peck, Kan Clovis, New Mex and Midland, Tex. This storm activity, as well as torrential downpours which occurred in this area, were the result of unstable air mass conditions which generally extended from central Texas into the Great Lakes region. These conditions resulted when cold air, pushing in behind cyclonic centers which intensified over the central Rocky Mountains and moved northeastward, interacted with the warm, moist air covering the Southeast. For the second consecutive week precipitation was recorded at most stations, and weekly totals were moderate to heavy over a vast portion of the country. Areas with light amounts were...
