Excerpt: . . . 295 XXV. TIME, PAST AND FUTURE The Apostle Peter very significantly divides the period of our life on earth into two portions; the time past of our life, and the rest of our time in the flesh. Forasmuch (he says) as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin: that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles. Every present moment of our mortal existence lies between these two divisions, and is like a bridge which connects them together, and affords a stand-point from which to survey them both. But some of these points of time are more especially fitted for such a survey; just as when a person is turning an hourglass, he can hardly help gazing on the bulb now full that is about to be emptied, as well as on the one now empty that is about to be filled. We are approaching the end of another year; and while the great bell of time sounds out its departure, we can hardly refuse the call to look backward on the year that is past, as well as forward on that which is to follow. We are arriving also...
