Not illustrated. 1816 Excerpt: . . . DISCUSSION ON THE QUESTION Whether Inhabitants of the United States, born there before the Independence, are, on coming to this Kingdom, to be considered as Natural-born Subjects f 1 Thought the affirmative of this question was acknowledged by all lawyers. One authority, it seems to me, is sufficient to support it; I mean, what is laid down in Calvins case, on the supposition that the crown of Scotland might, possibly, be separated from that of England: upon which point the judges resolved, That all those who were born under one natural obedience, while the realms were united under one sovereign, should remain natural-born subjects, and no aliens; for that naturalization, due and vested by birthright, cannot, by any separation of the crowns afterwards, be taken away; nor he that was by judg s ment of law a natural subject at the time of his birth, become an alien by such matter, ex post facto, and, in that case, upon such an accident, our post natus may be adjidem utriusque regis (7. Rep. 27. b.) or, to apply the words to the present case, our ante natus, or American born before the separation, may be adjidem regis, and also a citizen of the United States . Such a plain and explicit authority as this, seems to make it unnecessary to search for any other; however, objections are raised to the claim of such persons, to be considered as British-born subjects. 1st. It is objected...
