The field was well-nigh untrodden, when I set forth upon its exploration and in its trackless ways, my feet have led me over deserts as well as lands of promise. When my articles appeared in Architecture and Building they were often valuable as a means of stating that which I sought to prove, and of recalling later what part of it I found to be unprofitable, but at the end of some of these early statements I now may write, Quod erat demonstrandum. These I have collected in the following pages which I humbly submit to you in the selfish hope that tile s swift...
