New models and types were developed. Even in England Belgians have built factories and are helping to supply the British. Each week Elizabethville, a purely Belgian city, turns out an enormous number of shells of large sizes for the British. In England the Belgians also have built factories for explosives and at Birmingham an arms factory which serves not only their own armies but also the Allies. Personnel In peace times nearly all of the officers of artillery came from the Military Academy, to enter which a severe selection was made by oral and written tests. Students after graduating went to the post-graduate school for two years and a half. A certain number of officers of artillery later went to the cavalry school at Ypres where the instruction in equitation rivaled that of Samur and Turin. Finally some officers attended the School of War where staff work was taken up. All officers freshened up once a year at Brasschaet at the School of Fire and every three years there were great maneuvers. It would be ten years or more before the young officer could be a captain commanding a battery, and then he would be a captain for ten years. The war materially revolutionized all of this. From the day of the declaration of war there was a...
