

School Reform City Voices from an American Experiment

By Melissa M. Bailey

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 84 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.2in. A teacher pours her energy into an after-school ballet program even as she is dying from an autoimmune disease. A student wakes up at 4:30 a. m. every day to get on a public bus in search of a good education. A gay teacher comes out of the closet during a social justice lesson. A young refugee from Burundi finds her strength and rhythm in music class. These stories often lost in the national debate over how to fix American public schools can be found in this book. The stories contained in this book, first published in the New Haven Independent and culled from hundreds of stories on New Haven's school reform experiment, offer a human look at the complex challenges facing the effort to improve our nation's schools and a glimpse at some small triumphs along the way. The national school reform debate has polarized the nation. Discussions about charter schools, Teach For America, and teachers unions often devolve into such profound disagreement that opposing sides seem to speak different languages and lose sight of the experiences of the students...

Reviews

Definitely among the finest books we have at any time read. Better than never, though I am quite late in starting to read this one. Your lifestyle period will likely be transformed once you finish reading this book.

This publication can be really worth a go through, and superior to others. It is amongst the most amazing publications we have gone through. You won't feel monotony at any time of your own time (that's what catalogues are for about when you request me).
