I can already see the time when I ll stop coming home altogether. As Pa s mouthpiece, Ma does her job even better than he himself could do it. I m pelted with words all the time I m in the house. DECEMBER 14.--Three weeks is about all I could stand of the strike. Now my little money is gone and this morning I had to ask Ma for a half dollar. I had no car fare to go downtown with. But Ma, she said she d be blessed if she would give it to me, that it was hard for Pa to keep up this big household, and that he didn t propose to keep me on his shoulders much longer; that Sis was now big enough to get a steady and that it was high time that I got a home of my own, for I was spoiling the girl s chances. Her string of words got me so mad that I could have cried from anger, but I wouldn t give her the satisfaction. So I put on my hat and coat and walked out into the street. My people are sorely mistaken if they think that they can compel me to drop this strike. Once in the street I stopped right in front of the house. I couldn t go downtown, for I hadn t a cent to my name--a very unpleasant feeling, I must...
