Excerpt from The Oberlin Alumni Magazine, Vol. 2: November, 1905 It is just coming to realize that the training to be obtained by a study of Botany is as broad and severe as that given by any science; that the practical as well as the theoretical value of the science is hardly second to any; and that its relations to life are as manifold as those of Zoology, Physiology, Psychology or Sociology. For example the fundamental conditions of life, as well as the general laws of progression and evolution are the same among plants and animals. And the study of many of these laws can be more satisfactorily made with plants than with animals. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
