Low, Esq.: Before Members of the Chamber of Commerce; At the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New-York, October 8th, 1867 To correct misapprehension - to moderate expectation, and to satisfy the wish of any who would be informed on these points, let me briefly sketch the story of my journey, and show how much time was spent on the sea, how much on the land, and how much in passing from place to place, in a hurried tour of five months prior to my landing in Sicily. With your permission I will speak in the plural number - as I may properly do - for my wife and son were my companions during the whole journey; the other members of my family meeting us in Europe, and all returning home together. On the first of December last, we embarked in the Ocean Queen, Captain Grey, and after eight days passage, landed at Aspinwall on the ninth. There we spent the night, being hospitably entertained by Mr. Parker, Superintendent of the Panama Rail-Road Company. From Aspinwall to Panama we were five hours, arriving at 12 M. Our stay in this ancient city was short, but long enough; and, at three o'clock, we were on our way to the Golden Age, Captain Lapidge, which sailed at six P. M. of the tenth for San Francisco. After touching at Acapulco and Manzanilla, and putting into Monterey because of bad weather, we entered the Golden Gate on Christmas day; our whole voyage from New-York thus occupying twenty-four days. It was made in twenty by the Henry Chauncey and Golden City, with the passengers for the...
