Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.One day after school, the bus dropped off Tara and the girl next door and they proceeded on their jaunt home as usual. Naturally, they cut through the field like they did most days, because that saved them about two minutes, which from a child s perspective is of significant relevance. It just so happens that on this particular day, Tara had donned a bright red sweater-not just bright red but fire engine red. The bull grazed in the pasture, as was his afternoon habit, and the two girls strolled along, unconcerned by his presence. After all, they had walked through the pasture several dozen times before and the bull seemed not to even notice their trespassing. But that day, the bull had his eye on Tara and her bright red sweater; he started to make snorting sounds and stomped his shaggy foot in the dirt. The girls became uneasy, but remembered that people warned them not run from an animal, because that would prompt the animal to chase them. The bull turned broadside to the girls and arched his back. Tara could see the hair on his back standing straight up, as if statically charged, and the hair on the back of her neck responded accordingly. The bull vigorously shook his head from side to side, like he attempted to deter a pest buzzing around his face. He turned, facing them, making direct eye contact with his eyes protruding from their sockets. The bull stared down at the girls, warning them that they had invaded his fight or flight zone, and he had no intention of running. The horns on his head extended straight out, then curved...
