Absorption and Stripping :
Basics & Examples

Condition: New. Publisher/Verlag: LAP Lambert Academic Publishing | Absorption is one of the unit operations which involve transfer of one (or) more components of a gas stream to liquid stream. Stripping is the opposite phenomena to absorption; in this operation one or more components of a liquid stream are removed by vaporization into an insoluble gas stream. Both absorption and stripping can be operated as equilibrium stage operations with constant rate of liquid and vapour streams. The performance of an...
