Excerpt: . . . will give us credit for an earnest desire to prove ourselves worthy of your confidence; you will see that it has been our anxious wish to propose to the government no amendments on their bill, which were not justified by experience. It has been our desire to afford you the means of giving an additional proof to France of the deep and unceasing interest for her prosperity which animates you, when the question before you is the passing of a law tending to improve the condition of your fellow-citizens, and to render the lot of the working classes more happy, by providing for their health, their education, and their morals; in a word, when the object is to add to those physical, intellectual, and religious possessions, which constitute the welfare, honour, and prosperity of a wise and powerful nation. We trust that the bill...
