TheCapitol.Net, Inc. Paperback. Condition: New. 444 pages. Dimensions: 10.8in. x 8.1in. x 1.0in. Part of the Government Series, Energy: from TheCapitol. Net Biofuels have grown significantly in the past few years as a component of U. S. motor fuel supply. Current U. S. biofuels supply relies primarily on ethanol produced from Midwest corn. Today, ethanol is blended in more than half of all U. S. gasoline (at the 10 level or lower in most cases). Federal policy has played a key role in the emergence of the U. S. biofuels industry in general, and the corn ethanol industry in particular. U. S. biofuels production is supported by federal and state policies that include minimum usage requirements, blending and production tax credits, an import tariff to limit importation of foreign-produced ethanol, loans and loan guarantees to facilitate the development of biofuels production and distribution infrastructure, and research grants. Since the late 1970s, U. S. policy makers at both the federal and state levels have enacted a variety of incentives, regulations, and programs to encourage the production and use of agriculture-based renewable energy. Motivations cited for these legislative initiatives include energy security concerns, reduction in greenhouse gas emissions, and raising domestic demand for U. S. -produced farm products. Agricultural households and rural communities have responded to these government incentives and have expanded their production of renewable energy, primarily in the form of biofuels and wind power, every year since 1996. Ethanol and biodiesel, the two most widely used biofuels, receive significant government support under federal law in the form of mandated fuel use, tax incentives, loan and grant programs, and certain regulatory requirements. Ethanol plays a key role in policy discussions about energy, agriculture, taxes, and the environment. In the United States it is mostly made from corn; in other countries it is...
