Excerpt: . . . What Do Community-Based Nonprofits Do Nonprofits are businesses driven by a mission responsive to a need, innovative idea, and or opportunity. Many are started by business leaders and are entrepreneurial in nature, pioneering change, organizing and managing talent and resources, and taking on the risk of starting something new in sometimes less than optimum conditions. These organizations are champions of harnessing community resources in the form of donations, volunteers, government grants, foundations, leaders, investors, and other stakeholders and aligning these resources with their mission. They are experienced in blending public and private funds to maintain their vision and capacity in times of economic stability and uncertainty. Some have developed products and services that are commercialized and distributed nationally and internationally. They are driven by a culture shared by staff and with a vision that leads to unity of purpose, high level of commitment, and positive results consistent with their...
