Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2010. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Nan Lundeen s powerful collection of thirty-eight poems introduces the reader to women who refuse to wear pantyhose, who rebuff the duty train, and who discover the magic of a redemptive red bra. Her poetry celebrates the Goddess in her many guises, the Earth swathed in its solstitial shrouds, and the power of a women s circle. It reclaims the Persephone-Demeter myth as two independent women and celebrates the unafraid dark soul on the longest night of the year. The ancient Eastern goddess, Quan Yin, speaks soft as a bell offshore/soft as a white petal/dusting cheek of Muse. The Earth awakens in April and, the trees -- the narrow trees/seemingly dead/everywhere singing with frothy green. Lundeen s poetry honors the robust women of her Iowa heritage -- her late grandmother who becomes an angel, stirring soap in the farmhouse basement as an Easter ice storm rages; her mother, Marian, who refuses to relinquish her singing voice to dementia; and Aunt Geneva, who struggles like a sumo wrestler with her corset on her wedding day. She finds spirituality in simple scenes, The praying tree/one gray arm curved upward/as if she were a war veteran/who refuses to relinquish faith, and she finds grace in her little dog who sits beside her while she brushes her teeth: Nobody else I know will do that.
