A Swiss with U.S. roots, called Williams, employee of an international aid organization, was presented in the course of the smouldering new Korean crisis, to the executioner. However, there is more behind the story Pyongyang still gambles, as usually, poker, for more aid shipments, threatens with further, aggressive escalation in the uncontrollable conflict. While the international government delegations are agreeing on a renewed concession to prevent the conflagration of war, the tortured and starving man is answering questions, in a form of strange self-critics to his executioner. This context leads to ex-wife of the chief-executioner of Pyongyang. The all-powerful state security in Pyongyang accuses the former wife, that in the garden of the cottage, where she lives, red roses are growing as a cross. Suddenly it becomes clear, that the fates of those present, who had been interwoven, with each other, for the past decades. This is reason enough, to pick up the woman, to feed as well the executioner. The daughters have been placed in a reeducation facility. Furthermore, Williams speaks on the gallows, about his emotions in a...
