This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - To live an authentic life amidst the personal and cultural connections of the globalising world demands a particular form of human being , referred to as global citizenship . Global citizen becoming is a process of mundane and profound change to our sense of self-in-the-world and our abilities to act-in-the-world. Can such experiences contribute specifically to global citizen being and becoming Utilising the tools of phenomenology, we explore the lived-experience of UK undergraduate students across a number of different international mobility activities and witness the uniqueness of individual experience and learning, hitherto un-remarked forms of intersubjectivity, and multi-dimensional learning which leads to lifeworld change. 584 pp. Englisch.
