Schilt Publishing. Hardcover. Condition: New. 224 pages. Dimensions: 10.2in. x 7.6in. x 1.0in. Emmy Andriessse (1914-1953) is one of the most important 20th century women photographers, best known for her unforgettable portrayal of Amsterdams Hunger Winter of 1944-1945, now emblematic of civilian suffering during the Second World War. Andriessse as born into a liberal Dutch Jewish family. She was trained at the Royal Academy of Art in The Hague under the aegis of Gerrit Kiljan and Paul Schuitema, who pioneered the New Photography, based on Bauhaus principles -- as well as encouraging students to experiment with its role as a documentary medium. Her rigorous yet sensitive approach enabled Andriessse to produce images of extraordinary poetic power, while her versatile fashion, documentary, portrait and landscape photographs reveal her curiosity about her fellow human beings and sense of beauty in the world around her. She used her quick perception to capture everyday life, often emphasizing a specific aspect to lend strength to her compositions: cyclists pedalling into an oblong of sunlight on a cobbled street; the diagonal of a woman's bare legs stretched out on a beach, the sand rippled by the ebbing tide; three fishermen dwarfed by a giant net slicing across the foreground, or a blonde-haired Amsterdam teenager powdered with falling snow, as he clutches his led on his way to the frozen canals. Her image of three fishermen behind a net, taken in 1940, just before the German invasion, proved her last published photograph until after the war. Unable to work, then forced to wear the yellow star, her life darkened. Her marriage to Dick Elffers, who was from a Protestant family, protected her only for a while. Thus, in early 1943 Andriessse went into hiding. Together with Dick Elffers, she joined the artists resistance -- risky work for which...
