But ah, with the infinite loss Of honor, in lust of gain. And bitterness filled his soul, And he bowed his face to the earth--For her what was the worth? For him what was the dole? And there, for the wage of sin, A shot and a heart-beat stilled--Was it Love, was it Love that willed What better had never been? The Word THE WORD A gray wood and a lifting mist, A dewdrop by a sunbeam kissed, A sunset sky of roseate bars, A little pool that holds the stars, A robin singing while the light Fades softly into quiet night. A red leaf gently drifting down, A heart-cry from the crowded town-The moonlight on a far still stream, A prayer, a memory, a dream. The wafted fragrance of a rose, The haven that the sparrow knows, The nectar that invites the bee--The mystery...
