Excerpt from Juvenile Instructor, Vol. 40: Organ of the Deseret Sunday School Union; May 1, 1905 As soon as the meeting was over, the handshaking began anew. Some forgot where they began and kept on shaking as they passed about the crowd. The elders were not permitted to return to the room hungry, so a supper was provided. A few of the leading sisters took part in preparing the repast and the elders took their places around the table. About half the audience remained to chat. The women seemed to do most of the talking. They were jolly and ready with their wit. Their voices possess a fine musical tone and most expressions are accompanied by a pleasant smile that reveals the pearly white teeth that adorn the mouth. On this social occasion the Mexican men had less to say than the Semoras who were much in evidence and rarely gave their husbands a chance to be jolly and talkative.
