John Bright for a long time quietly sustained the enormous loss of keeping his mills open at least half time, with no material to work with. There he stood, all Quaker as he was, praying that the North might not stay its hand till the last slave was freed, even if no bales of cotton were sent to relieve his grievous losses, protesting against outside interference. When the day came which marked the passing away of this venerable patriot, one of earth s greatest and best, an attempt was made in Congress to pass a vote of sympathy, and to the shame and disgrace of the United States, it must be said that Congress refused to pay even this poor tribute to the memory of the best friend the United States had in the whole wide world in the hour of her greatest distress. This was done because it would be offensive to the Irish. John Bright could see no difference between disunion in the United States and disunion in the United Kingdom. He had written to Mr. Gladstone concerning Parnell, Dillon, O Brian Co., saying, You deem them patriots, I hold them not to be patriots but conspirators against the Crown and Government of the United Kingdom. These men were afterward found guilty of criminal conspiracy, and Parnell was received with honors on the floor of Congress. While this is being written Dillon and O Brian, two fugitives from justice, are holding...
