Createspace, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . I keep a small revolver tucked under my pillow. Every morning, I wake up and grab the little device and turn it on all sides. I inspect it as if its power of destruction could be easily comprehended. Sometimes I press the barrel to my right temple. My index finger curled around the trigger, I close my eyes and count to ten. Of course, the gun s never loaded. Nevertheless, it makes you think. You see, this is the only power we have. True freedom, as I like to say, comes from the realization that you can kill yourself any time you want. Sunlight slipping through the heavy curtains, casting red dots on the walls, I can feel my blood boiling inside my body. My heart beats like a fist inside my chest; the metallic coolness of the gun infects my skin. Loaded or not, it doesn t matter. I m ready to pull the trigger. I want to see God and ask Him a million questions. I press the gun to my chest and take a deep breath. This is not my life. We all die and there s nothing terrifying or great about it. This isn t a life worth living. The gun pressed hard against my chest, right where the heart should be, I pull the trigger. That s when I can open my eyes. That s when I can smile. When I can feel alive just because I could ve and yet I didn t. Every morning I wake up and die.
