Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from Without Home or Country Alas, too hard is our fate, and too hardly must we feel now the truth of a verse of our greatest national poet, the predecessor of the present ex-king of Montenegro, the crowned bishop, prince and poet Peter Petrovic Njegos, usually called the Vladika Rade, the author of several philosophical lyrics, and of the greatest epic poem in modern Serbian literature (Iuca Mikrokosma) with the Miltonic theme of strife with Adam; and of the most popular lyric-epic drama (gorski Vijenac), very original both in form and subject, with the eternal theme of all our earlier poetry, that of our people's struggle for freedom from the Turkish oppression, drawn on a greater scale of human and physical struggle for life. No resurrection without death, said the poet in his epigrammatic manner, which made it possible that many of his philosophical thoughts came, to rank as popular proverbs and sayings. This is the verse which we most often remember now and repeat in our minds. No resurrection day Without the days of Golgotha. We thought that we had reached the end of our days on Calvary; that we stood in the glory and the brightness of our future imperishable life. And we would have the whole world believe. This with us, so strong was our belief. Now we see that it was only the first streak of dawn, very soon to grow clouded by misfortunes; not the long-lived-for and intensely expected day. But we are joyful too that it was only our daybreak which was clouded miserably. May the day which most certainly will come, be the more bright and sunny. About the Publisher Forgotten Books...
