Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Pennsylvania Timber Industries: A Periodic Assessment of Timber Output Pennsylvania timberlands support a variety of valuable hardwood species such as black cherry, white ash, red and white oaks, and hard maple. In the past it was the practice to harvest high-value individual trees of these species and leave trees of less desirable species and those with poor form and low value. This type of harvesting has become very expensive, and typically leaves large numbers of residual trees and logging debris per unit of volume recovered. Immediately after harvesting, these residual stands have no further economically feasible use, and they are visually and environmentally unacceptable. A primary goal for industry should be to provide for the complete and highest use of the State's timber resources. This means that more wood fiber should be recovered and channeled to the wood-using industry best suited to convert each class of roundwood from each forested acre. Such newly developed equipment as rubber-tired skidders and total tree systems are well suited for harvesting hardwood timber stands, but this equipment represents a substantial investment.
