. Waddell, by Kheir combined efforts could produce no finer representation (of evening) than that which follows in the four succeeding lines. There is not, in the whole compass oi Shakspeare a more perfect picture, including figure, color, action, time, flnd sound, with moral sense conjoined, than is here presented in some two-5cents0l cents words: yet the whole concluding portion of this wonderful work was dashed ofl most probably during an evening s walk or ride from Kilmarnock to Mossgiel, in child-like acquiescence with the suggestions of a printer, and to meet thl requirements of the compositor when his operations began. was merely the creature of the poet s imagination, created for the purpose of holding chat with his favorite Lualh. --Lette1 of Gilbert Burns, vol. iii., Appendix, Currie s Ed. p The main object of this poem, Dr. Currie has remarked, seems to...
