Excerpt: . are found in the rural schools of the state. In order that these schools, which are certainly deserving of the best, may have trained teachers, Wisconsin and some other states have provided a county teachers training school. The applicants are limited to the county and the graduates find their field of work in the rural schools of the county. The county supervisors may establish the school and levy the tax for its support. They must provide a building or rooms for the accommodation of the school and maintain it for a year. After that the state furnishes one-half the money required for its support, provided the expense in any one year does not exceed $3500. Graduates from this school receive a license for three years which is good only in that county. The course of study covers from one to two years, according to...
