Excerpt from Chemical Technology, Vol. 4: Or Chemistry in Its Applications to Arts and Manufactures, With Which Is Incorporated Richardson and Watt s Chemical Technology Son apology is perhaps necessary for the attempt to compress into the space of some two hundred and seventy pages a mass of information covering the whole subject of Electric Lighting. The aim has been to put together a connected, and, as far as possible, complete and scientific account of the whole subject in such a manner as it is hoped may be useful to specialists in one or more branches of work connected with electrical industry who may wish for a resume of all the varioussystem, machinery, lamps, c., in use for the supply of electric lighting; more especially to Architects, Civil and Mechanical Engineers, and scientific workers, to whom a general knowledge of the subject is of professional value. To such readers the completeness of their general view is of the highest value, though it may not be the detailed knowledge of the actual worker in one branch, since they will wish to know the reasons, not merely the bare facts, of certain data and limitations which, originating in the achievements of a collateral industry, may apply to their own professional work. It is hoped that the work may be read with facility by any one who has an elementary knowledge of Electricity and Magnetism, or even that knowledge which every educated person will acquire by observation without further instruction and reading. Efforts have been made to avoid gaps in the logical continuity of the argument; and to simplify formula by a reduction to the minimum of all minor corrections necessary to professional exactness. In short,...
