The famous mountain Slieve Guillian, near Belleek, is too interesting an object to go unnoticed. Belleek, I may observe en passant, is a small town of one street, situated at the base of the mountains, and was once a place of consequence. A large fair was formerly held there, but the country boys evinced such a boisterous disposition, and fought so desperately, that it was obliged to be discontinued. Having passed the mountain house and Leslea Chapel, we put up our horse at Mullabran School-house, the master of which appeared a superior man. He informed me that four Protestant schools were established in the neighbourhood, free to all parties, but that the priests objected to the Catholic children attending them. Here we engaged a guide (who, according to custom, professed to know every thing relating to the mountains), and commenced our ascent by a very rugged path--enlivened, however, by innumerable plants of the heather (the flowers of both the 204 CAIRN ON SLIEVE GUILLIEN. tetralix and the cineria being perfectly white) and refreshed by the fruit of the bleaberry, which grew there in great abundance. On gaining the summit of this mountain I was indeed richly rewarded. The cairn which renders it so celebrated, instead of being...
