Excerpt from Oberlin: Its Origin, Progress and Results; An Address, Prepared for the Alumni of Oberlin College, Assembled August 22, 1860 In testimony of our fixed purpose thus to do, in reliance on divine grace, we hereunto affix our names. These articles were thought to serve the purpose of bring ing together families, devoted not only to a common end, but agreeing in their views of practical duty and in the means of promoting religious education. After a few years, however, the Covenant was mainly laid aside, being found to be too specific to serve as a. General pledge of Christian purpose, and too general to be a guide to specific duty. It was often more difficult in a particular case to decide what the Covenant required, than what were the require ments of Christian benevolence. It seemed more whole some and more conducive to Christian unity to shorten rather than lengthen either the creed or the covenant. The plan arranged, a name was required for the school and the colony. This was borrowed not from Oberlin the elegant scholar, but from Oberlin the Swiss pastor, rep resenting in his self-denying and efficient life that love toward God and that sympathy with man which the found ers of this school desired to establish and cherish here. The school, although sufficiently grand in its conception to be called a university, according to the modern western fashion, was named the Oberlin Collegiate Institute, which remained its legal designation until the name was changed upon application to the legislature in 1850. A place was found within the limits of the county where the plan was formed - a tract in an unbroken forest, entirely unappropriated by...
