Not illustrated. 1833 Excerpt: .was discovered to be no other than the Fifth of November), muttered out, distinctly enough to be heard by the whole company, words to this effect, that, when the old one is gone, he is a fool that looks for a better. Which rudeness of his, the guests resenting, unanimously voted iis expulsion; and the male-content was thrust out neck and heels into the cellar, as the properest place for such a boutefeu and firebrand, as he had shown himself to be. Order being restored the young lord (who to say truth, had been a little ruffled, and put beside his oratory) in as few, and yet as obliging words as possible, assured them of entire welcome, and, with a graceful turn, singling oat poor Twenty Ninth of February, that bad sate all this while mum-chance at the sideboard, begged to couple his health with that of the good company before him--which he drank accordingly; observing, that he had not seen his honest face any time these four years, with a number of endearing expressions besides. At the same time, removing the solitary Day from the forlorn seat which had been assigned to him, he stationed him at his own board, somewhere between the Greek Calends and Latter Lammas. Ash Wednesday, being now called upon for a song, with his eyes fast stuck in his head.and as well as the Canary he had swallowed would give him leave, struck up a Carol, which Christmas Day had...
