The first examination of his wound was decisive; recovery was hopeless! # Night came on again, with her pomp of light and shade--the night that for Falkland had no morrow. One solitary lamp burned in the chamber where he lay alone with God and his own heart. He had desired his couch to be placed by the window, and requested his attendants to withdraw. The gentle and balmy air stole over him, as free and bland as if it were to breathe for him for ever; and the silver moonlight came gleaming through the lattice, and played upon his wan brow, like the tenderness of a bride that sought to kiss him to repose. In a few hours, thought he, as he lay gazing on the high stars which seemed such silent witnesses of an eternal and unfathomed mystery, in a few hours either this feverish and wayward spirit will be at rest for ever, or it will have commenced a new career in an untried and unimaginable existence! In a very few hours I may be amongst the very heavens that I survey--a part of their own glory--a new link in a new order of beings--breathing amidst the elements of a more gorgeous world--arrayed myself in the attributes of a purer and diviner nature--a wanderer among the planets--an associate of angels--the beholder of the arcana of the great God--redeemed, regenerate, immortal, or--dust! There is no CEDipus to solve the enigma of life....
