Tyndale House Publishers, Inc., 2014. Book Condition: New. Brand New, Unread Copy in Perfect Condition. A+ Customer Service! Summary: QUICK HIT - With hidden motives, captivating twists, and superb writing, Allison Pittman draws readers into her expertly crafted story and into the lives of her conflicted and complex characters. Novels can generally be described as plot-driven (the actions make the story) or character-driven (the characters make the story), but in reality all story is tension-driven. The actions or the characters are only as compelling as the reason for the reader to jump out of their lives and engage in the characters'. It took two chapters-to the end of the Written Confession of Margaret DuFrane-to know that I wasn't going to put this book down until I could close the final pages. Pittman balances the action and the characters well, expertly relying on the novel's tension to keep readers engaged in the story. The early 1900s were a magical time in American history. So much innovation, so much new technology, a booming economy. Perhaps nothing epitomized these things more than the Hollywood of the Roaring Twenties. Celeste DuFrane has long been in the world of Hollywood thanks to her father's innovations in color film and it's time for her to make a name for herself as an actress. But when Celeste's mother dies, family secrets begin to come unraveled . . . and Dana Lundgren, the woman who allegedly killed Celeste's sister as a baby some twenty years before, shows up at her door as co-heir of the DuFrane fortune. The question both of them are thinking: Why did Margaret DuFrane leave half her fortune to her daughter's killer? The following 300 pages intertwine the past and present to provide a beautifully written answer, as the life stories of both Dana and Celeste are...
