Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Honey Market News, 1964, Vol. 48 The honey market ruled generally quiet at most levels. Bulk sales continued at about a normal seasonal pace, with prices generally unchanged from the past period. Pro ducats received mostly 14-l5c per pound for bulk lots of Midwestern, good quality, white or better clover honey. Retail honey sales were considered good at some points, but this was not the general rule on the average. In fact, sales slacked off following the holiday season in much of the country, but were expected to perk up shortly. Colonies in many of the cold northern sections of the country experienced at least partial cleansing flights during the first week of the new year. A short lived warm spell moved across the Nation during that week. In areas where it was still too cold for actual flights, colonies managed to at least shift clusters onto new supplies. Thus, it was felt that most bees were wintering satisfactorily with, of course, some exceptions. In southern California, some brood rearing occurred in areas where there was a small nectar flow in progress. One central Louisiana beekeeper reported that rather heavy colony losses in that part of the State. Erratic weather conditions prevailed across the country during the period. The first week found temperatures generally above normal over most of the area east of the region east of the Mississippi River Valley. Generous rains fell along the northwestern Pacific Coast. Most other areas eastward to the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers received less than a quarter of an inch. The heaviest snow fall of the century fell over parts of the Southeastern States with ten and a half inches reported at Bay...
