Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Notes and Queries, Vol. 12: A Medium of Intercommunication for Literary Men, General Readers, Etc They had ordered horses at four, which, it seemed, had not come. The Guards marched at four the same morning, and Russell had called the last thing before marching for the chance of finding a servant up to get his sword or something that he had left a day or two before. In the course of a day or two we learned that Bonaparte had never quitted Paris, and that the report had been treacherously spread for the purpose of making Louis quit Lille. The best of the joke is that four or five days afterwards Lord Waterpark sent over a lady, his sister-in-law, disguised in a French costume and travelling in a carriage of the country, for the purpose of ascertaining in whose possession Brussels was, whether Boney was here, and what chance Lord Waterpark had of recovering certain heavy packages he had left behind. This lady was recognized, notwithstanding her disguise, in a shop by one of the Ladies L., and was obliged to confess the object of her mission, and expressed surprise that any English persons were found still at large in this town. We are all packed up and ready to start at a moments warning, but I should not be at all surprised at the Dukes refining a little too much, for he is very sanguine, expecting the success of the Allies, and, in short, of all of us being made prisoners should the great Emperor make a dash at Belgium. Bonaparte said a few days ago: Je plains beaucoup pour ces bons Bourbons. We have had most of the...
