Not illustrated. 1918 Excerpt: .a member, the Roman Catholic child is insured attendance at mass and the Protestant child forms the habit of churchgoing. In the work of general moral instruction (here seems less difficulty, when it is wisely planned for. We are ready to grant that there is much that is quite worth while in a general chapel service, but we do question whether that good is not more than compensated by the loss. How can it be possible to plan a service which shall suit primary and high school grades ; This is never attempted in public schools where the fuller understanding of English greatly lessens the difficulty. Is it not a wiser plan to have each teacher give religious instruction to her own class each morning, with a separate chapel service for each department on Sunday? What shall we use as the basis for the daily religious teaching? No doubt hymns and quotations from the great authors are well, but are we not in danger of giving too little time to the text of our Holy Scriptures? Much is said of the ignorance of the Scriptures among our college men and women. It is deemed lamentable. Why less so for our boys and girls? There can not be too much memorizing of the language of our Bible. There can not be too great familiarity with the narratives of both Old and New Testaments. I would plead for a closer adherence to the Scripture text in all this...
