Find details at the end of the description below. AJ Montgomery is about to do something he knows he shouldn't. He knows it's going to get him a lot of trouble, but when your three best friends are dissing you because you're afraid, then sometimes you make bad decisions-like the one AJ is about to make. AJ isn't a happy boy. For one thing, he is mad at his mom. He's mad because four years ago she went away. She shouldn't have left him alone with his dad. Now there's just the two of them, and his father is even angrier than AJ. Neither has ever really dealt with their grief. Somehow they've confused anger with sadness. Most of the time AJ keeps his anger buried, but with his father, it's right at the surface-and twelve-year-old AJ is its target again and again. That's why he's mad at his mom, and that's why he's not very happy. None of AJ's friends know about the grief AJ carries with him, and even if they did, they probably wouldn't care. They're just looking for a good time-like skateboarding through the local cemetery to torment the groundskeeper, a terribly deformed man they call the Keeper of the Dead. When AJ's friends goad him into a midnight trip to vandalize the cemetery and he gets caught, the police require AJ to perform 180 hours of community service in the cemetery with Mr. Hector Morales, who, it turns out, is none other than that weird old man, the Keeper of...
