Not illustrated. 1906 Excerpt: . the various sections of the Civil Service; and by the hundreds of telephone operators in London and the Provinces who have swelled the ranks of the Association formed last year, as a result of the dispute at Holborn Exchange, London. There was no great Trade dispute specially affecting women during the year, the crisis among the Lancashire Textile workers which at one time seemed inevitable having been happily averted. As an example of several small disputes, that of a number of girls employed on piece-work at Paper bag making in the East End of London might be quoted. These girls protested against the prices offered for making bank cash bags of exceptionally thick paper, and after a strike of two days duration their demand for an increase of 2d. per thousand was conceded. As a result they formed a branch of the National Union of Tea Packers, and are now staunch Trade Unionists. Although only two women delegates attended the Trade Unions Congress at Hanley in September, women were in evidence at the side shows, and the great meeting of women workers organised by the Women s Trade Union League was perhaps the most successful of the week. The most hopeful feature of this encouraging growth of Trade Unionism among women is the development of, capable leaders from the ranks of the workers themselves. Many of the Unions are fulfilling the function of schools of social and economic education for their members, and so not..
