Excerpt from The Chestermarke Instinct Nevertheless, the bank must be attended, and, at ten minutes to nine, Neale lighted a cigarette, put on his hat, and strolled slowly across the market-place. Although he knew every single one of its cobble stones, every shop window, every landmark in it, that queer old square always fascinated him. It was a bit of old England. The ancient church and equally ancient Moot Hall spread along one side of it; the other three sides were filled with gabled and half timbered houses; the market-cross which stood in the middle of the Open space had been erected there in Henry the Seventh s time. Amidst all the change and development of the nineteenth century, Scarn ham had been left untouched: even the bank itself was a timeworn building, and the manager s house which ?anked it was still older. Underneath all these ancient structures were queer nooks and corners. Se cret passages and stairs, hiding-places, cellarings go ing far beneath the gardens at the backs of the houses Neale, as a boy, had made many an exploration in them, especially beneath the bank-house, which was a veritable treasury of concealed stairways and cunningly contrived doors in the black oak of the pan ellings.
