A Poetic Narrative Of 'Lochinvar'

By Charles Welsh Berry

C.W. Berry, 1997. Soft cover. Condition: New. No Jacket. P/B 112 pages, condition is NEW. Some biographical details are no doubt essential, so that blame or otherwise may be attributed to the right quarters, for the contents of this book. The poet was born in a place of ill-repute! Fish Wynd - opposite the Kirkcaldy Harbour area, on the 14th of May, 1927, some might say an unlucky year for his mother, who later had to survive his playful exploits as young boy, youth and man. He was named Charles Welsh Berry. His father - also Charles - having lived in Glasgow (though originally hailing from Edinburgh) eventually came to rest in Kirkcaldy for the remainder of his life. His mother - Jeannie Welsh - was from nearby Dysart. Some dispute arose from the subsequent marriage, causing the former to be disinherited. Was it, perhaps, an omen of things to come? Straight from school, at age fourteen, he was employed in the local coal mining industry, then on to various other forms of employment, none of which ever daunted his spirit of egalitarianism. A staunch supporter of union activity, he fought articulate, principled battles in the workplace for justice and...
