Excerpt: . . . WALTHAM EVENING INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL, WALTHAM, MASS. The industrial evening schools in Waltham are a result of a canvass of the machinists of the city. A large number of them had previously attended a hearing and asked the school committee to furnish them instruction which would advance them in their calling. The committee invited the Massachusetts Commission on Industrial Education to attend this meeting, and at its conclusion, when the desire of the men for this instruction was evident, asked the commission to establish a school. Instruction. --The work as outlined for these young machinists has been mechanical drawing, shop mathematics and machine shop practice, every man taking each course one night per week. While the results of this plan cannot be forecast with certainty, the present interest and the large waiting list combined show that the workmen themselves feel that it is giving them...
